

Making Crypto Mainstream.

Web 5.0

In the 90s, Web 1.0 created massive new opportunities for companies and organizations to engage members and ushered in new business models, like e-commerce and software-as-a-service.

No longer having to rely on gatekeepers at newspapers, magazines, radio and TV, anyone could write some HTML code and deploy it using the open HTTP protocol.

But it required a lot of technical knowhow and coding.

More and more features came to be expected for Web 2.0 and greatly increased cost of development and testing.

Rather than each project re-inventing this from scratch, they have begun to outsource to empowering platforms:

2.3% of all
web sites

40% of all
all web sites

3% of all
e-com sites

31% of all
e-com sites

Now, Web 3.0 has once again presented new opportunities and business models for companies and organizations:

Most regular businesses do not have the knowhow to take advantage of these technologies. They're willing to pay an empowering platform to take care of all technical details.

Intercoin has built exactly such a platform, to move the space from feudalism to a free market.

Companies and organizations want alternatives to centralized services, that make it easy to create their own storefront and community, that they can customize and control.

Web 1.0

Web 2.0

Web 3.0

Feudalism → Free Market.

 Intercoin technology goes beyond Web3.

Web 5.0 is about mainstream adoption and utility.

The easiest way to describe Web5 is with the formula:
Web2 (social) + Web3 (decentralized) = Web5
